Key Findings & Business Recommendations

Customers with month-to-month contracts, shorter tenure, and electronic check payments exhibit higher churn rates than those with longer-term contracts, longer tenure, and other payment methods. These findings suggest that contract type, customer tenure, and payment method are associated with customer retention.

Recommendations

- Prioritise customer segments with elevated churn rates for targeted retention strategies.
- Investigate opportunities to encourage longer-term contracts and improve early-stage customer engagement.
- Explore factors underlying higher churn among electronic check users.
